

The Intelligencer.

OFFICE, 25 & 27 Fourteenth St.
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 9, 1874.

From New Orleans.

Letter from one of the delegates to the Great Masonic Triennial Convention—Experiences on Route—Meeting with a Gentleman and Genuine Georgian—Arrival in the Crescent City.

New Orleans, Dec. 5, 1874.

Editors of the Intelligencer:

Thinking a brief account of the trip of the Wheeling Knights Templar to the Triennial Convention, which was assembled at this place on the 1st inst., may be of some interest to your many readers, especially those of the fraternity, I have jotted down some notes by the way, and take the liberty of sending them to your paper for publication.

WHO WERE IN THE PARTY.

Our party, consisting of Grand Commander Odell S. Long, Sir Knights George, "Count" Schumacher, and Carothers of Wheeling Commandery No. 1, and Sir Knights Andrew J. Stone and E. W. S. Moore, of Crusade Commandery, U. D. of Fairmont, reached Pittsburgh on the 25th ult., where they joined the Pittsburgh delegation, and on the 27th ult. started for New Orleans. Taking dinner at Cumberland, we reached the "City of Magnificent Distances" about 10 o'clock P. M. There were joined by the New York, Boston and Pennsylvania delegations, making a train of eight Pullman cars, and were placed under the care of E. M. Jenkins, one of the noted firm of Cook, Son & Jenkins, professional tourists—and we may here remark, by way of parenthesis, that Mr. Jenkins took excellent care of us through the whole route, and we cordially recommend the firm to those getting up excursions. The spare no trouble to accommodate the travelers placing themselves under their charge.

THE JOURNEY FROM LYNCHBURG.

On Saturday, the 28th ult., we breakfasted at Lynchburg, Va., and arrived at Greensboro, N. C., about dusk. There we had to change cars, and during the interim had the good fortune to meet a very intelligent North Carolinian, whom we straightway interviewed. The result of our inquiries was about the same as we found along the whole route—"Hard times and poor prospects." He said the people had no energy to attempt anything. Their poll-tax was $1.25, and the State tax $1.25 on the poll, and $100 on the land. We got to Charlotte, N. C., about midnight, where we got supper. This was the only place of any importance, in size that we passed, after leaving Lynchburg, Va.

On Sunday, the 29th ult., we took breakfast at Central S. C., and about 10 o'clock crossed the Broad River, and went "marching through Georgia." At Lenoir, in Abbeville county, our train stopped to wait up, and the boys took advantage of the stop, to do the same thing.

MEETING WITH A GEORGIAN.

Whilst engaged in this pleasant occupation, a gaunt and genuine Georgian, with long, unkempt hair, and tattered clothing, approached our party, being in a feral mood, forthwith interviewed him, and elicited the following statements: He, the aforesaid Georgian, had a fine plantation, the finest land in Georgia, and would sell for $5 per acre. He would sell to a Northerner, provided he was not a Republican. No Republican could stay in that country, as none but Ku-Klux were allowed to live there, and if a radical purchased land, it was found out that he was of that persuasion, he "would have to get up and get it." Seeing what anxious eyes he cast upon the pint of aromatic fluid, distilled from the juice of the apple—denominated "apple brandy" in common parlance—in possession of one of our party, (Note.—Not one of the West Virginians, however,) he was asked if he "would not take a smile."

HE QUICKLY "SMILED,"

and then, with the chagrin of the party, put the bottle in his pocket, and started up the hill, bidding us "good-bye," and asking us to call on him, &c. Just at this time the train started, and the Georgian tantalized us (not us personally, of course) by running after the train, motioning as if he were going to throw us the bottle, and then stopping and taking another "smile." After keeping this up for a hundred yards or so, he finally threw us the bottle, which one of our party caught, at the risk of falling off the train. What risks some men will run in "political matters!" It may be noted here, as a singular fact, that not one of the party offered a Georgian a drink during the balance of the trip.

ARRIVAL AT ATLANTA.

About 4 o'clock P. M. we arrived at Atlanta, Ga., where we were met by some resident Sir Knights and entertained in a handsome manner. Atlanta is a place of considerable size and importance, and having an hour or two to spare, "Count" Schumacher, Long, Carothers, and myself, took a little jaunt through the place. The private residences of many of the citizens exhibited the presence of wealth, culture and refinement, and the business houses were very creditably indeed.

THROUGH ALABAMA.

On Monday, the 1st inst. we woke up at the little town of Greenville, Ala., and took breakfast at 11 o'clock A. M., at Hotel Ala. This is not a regular eating station, but as our train was some hours behind, Mr. Jenkins had telegraphed ahead, and the station house had been converted into a vast dining hall, where some three hundred hungry people were fed.

We passed Mobile and Montgomery; did not stop but a few moments at either place. The smallpox was raging very severely at Mobile, but was mostly confined to the colored population, numbers of whom were dying. We crossed the Alabama river about 2 o'clock P. M., and at 3 o'clock crossed Mobile Bay. About forty miles from New Orleans we crossed St. Louis Bay, which is about two miles wide.

RESUME OF THE JOURNEY.

Our route was from Pittsburgh via the Connellsville route to Washington, D. C.; then via the Washington City, Maryland & Great Western Railroad to Danville, Va.; then via the Piedmont Air Line Railway to Atlanta, Ga., touching at Greensboro and Charlotte, N. C., and Atlanta & West Point Railroad, and Western Railroad of Alabama to Montgomery, Ala.; then via the Mobile & Montgomery Railroad to Mobile, Ala., and then via the New Orleans, Mobile & Texas Railroad to New Orleans.

The scenery along the route was rather monotonous. Through Virginia, Mississippi, unutilized fields, and fine forests through North and South Carolina ditto; through Georgia and Alabama, ditto, with an occasional cotton field of small size, and through Louisiana, and part of Alabama, one continuous swamp, with our utter disgust, however, not one alligator showed his ugly head. Although we had our fire-arms all cocked, primed and ready for deadly work.

AS TO POPULATION.

The negroes largely predominate along the route. They seemed to be taking life easy. So they had food enough for today, they let to-morrow provide for itself. The whitest seem to be idle and lifeless, and to one accustomed to the

New Advertisements.

CENTRAL BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

OFFICE, 25 & 27 Fourteenth St.
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 9, 1874.

From New Orleans.

Letter from one of the delegates to the Great Masonic Triennial Convention—Experiences on Route—Meeting with a Gentleman and Genuine Georgian—Arrival in the Crescent City.

New Orleans, Dec. 5, 1874.

Editors of the Intelligencer:

Thinking a brief account of the trip of the Wheeling Knights Templar to the Triennial Convention, which was assembled at this place on the 1st inst., may be of some interest to your many readers, especially those of the fraternity, I have jotted down some notes by the way, and take the liberty of sending them to your paper for publication.

WHO WERE IN THE PARTY.

Our party, consisting of Grand Commander Odell S. Long, Sir Knights George, "Count" Schumacher, and Carothers of Wheeling Commandery No. 1, and Sir Knights Andrew J. Stone and E. W. S. Moore, of Crusade Commandery, U. D. of Fairmont, reached Pittsburgh on the 25th ult., where they joined the Pittsburgh delegation, and on the 27th ult. started for New Orleans. Taking dinner at Cumberland, we reached the "City of Magnificent Distances" about 10 o'clock P. M. There were joined by the New York, Boston and Pennsylvania delegations, making a train of eight Pullman cars, and were placed under the care of E. M. Jenkins, one of the noted firm of Cook, Son & Jenkins, professional tourists—and we may here remark, by way of parenthesis, that Mr. Jenkins took excellent care of us through the whole route, and we cordially recommend the firm to those getting up excursions. The spare no trouble to accommodate the travelers placing themselves under their charge.

THE JOURNEY FROM LYNCHBURG.

On Saturday, the 28th ult., we breakfasted at Lynchburg, Va., and arrived at Greensboro, N. C., about dusk. There we had to change cars, and during the interim had the good fortune to meet a very intelligent North Carolinian, whom we straightway interviewed. The result of our inquiries was about the same as we found along the whole route—"Hard times and poor prospects." He said the people had no energy to attempt anything. Their poll-tax was $1.25, and the State tax $1.25 on the poll, and $100 on the land. We got to Charlotte, N. C., about midnight, where we got supper. This was the only place of any importance, in size that we passed, after leaving Lynchburg, Va.

On Sunday, the 29th ult., we took breakfast at Central S. C., and about 10 o'clock crossed the Broad River, and went "marching through Georgia." At Lenoir, in Abbeville county, our train stopped to wait up, and the boys took advantage of the stop, to do the same thing.

MEETING WITH A GEORGIAN.

Whilst engaged in this pleasant occupation, a gaunt and genuine Georgian, with long, unkempt hair, and tattered clothing, approached our party, being in a feral mood, forthwith interviewed him, and elicited the following statements: He, the aforesaid Georgian, had a fine plantation, the finest land in Georgia, and would sell for $5 per acre. He would sell to a Northerner, provided he was not a Republican. No Republican could stay in that country, as none but Ku-Klux were allowed to live there, and if a radical purchased land, it was found out that he was of that persuasion, he "would have to get up and get it." Seeing what anxious eyes he cast upon the pint of aromatic fluid, distilled from the juice of the apple—denominated "apple brandy" in common parlance—in possession of one of our party, (Note.—Not one of the West Virginians, however,) he was asked if he "would not take a smile."

HE QUICKLY "SMILED,"

and then, with the chagrin of the party, put the bottle in his pocket, and started up the hill, bidding us "good-bye," and asking us to call on him, &c. Just at this time the train started, and the Georgian tantalized us (not us personally, of course) by running after the train, motioning as if he were going to throw us the bottle, and then stopping and taking another "smile." After keeping this up for a hundred yards or so, he finally threw us the bottle, which one of our party caught, at the risk of falling off the train. What risks some men will run in "political matters!" It may be noted here, as a singular fact, that not one of the party offered a Georgian a drink during the balance of the trip.

ARRIVAL AT ATLANTA.

About 4 o'clock P. M. we arrived at Atlanta, Ga., where we were met by some resident Sir Knights and entertained in a handsome manner. Atlanta is a place of considerable size and importance, and having an hour or two to spare, "Count" Schumacher, Long, Carothers, and myself, took a little jaunt through the place. The private residences of many of the citizens exhibited the presence of wealth, culture and refinement, and the business houses were very creditably indeed.

THROUGH ALABAMA.

On Monday, the 1st inst. we woke up at the little town of Greenville, Ala., and took breakfast at 11 o'clock A. M., at Hotel Ala. This is not a regular eating station, but as our train was some hours behind, Mr. Jenkins had telegraphed ahead, and the station house had been converted into a vast dining hall, where some three hundred hungry people were fed.

We passed Mobile and Montgomery; did not stop but a few moments at either place. The smallpox was raging very severely at Mobile, but was mostly confined to the colored population, numbers of whom were dying. We crossed the Alabama river about 2 o'clock P. M., and at 3 o'clock crossed Mobile Bay. About forty miles from New Orleans we crossed St. Louis Bay, which is about two miles wide.

RESUME OF THE JOURNEY.

Our route was from Pittsburgh via the Connellsville route to Washington, D. C.; then via the Washington City, Maryland & Great Western Railroad to Danville, Va.; then via the Piedmont Air Line Railway to Atlanta, Ga., touching at Greensboro and Charlotte, N. C., and Atlanta & West Point Railroad, and Western Railroad of Alabama to Montgomery, Ala.; then via the Mobile & Montgomery Railroad to Mobile, Ala., and then via the New Orleans, Mobile & Texas Railroad to New Orleans.

The scenery along the route was rather monotonous. Through Virginia, Mississippi, unutilized fields, and fine forests through North and South Carolina ditto; through Georgia and Alabama, ditto, with an occasional cotton field of small size, and through Louisiana, and part of Alabama, one continuous swamp, with our utter disgust, however, not one alligator showed his ugly head. Although we had our fire-arms all cocked, primed and ready for deadly work.

AS TO POPULATION.

The negroes largely predominate along the route. They seemed to be taking life easy. So they had food enough for today, they let to-morrow provide for itself. The whitest seem to be idle and lifeless, and to one accustomed to the

New Advertisements.

CENTRAL BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

OFFICE, 25 & 27 Fourteenth St.
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 9, 1874.

From New Orleans.

Letter from one of the delegates to the Great Masonic Triennial Convention—Experiences on Route—Meeting with a Gentleman and Genuine Georgian—Arrival in the Crescent City.

New Orleans, Dec. 5, 1874.

Editors of the Intelligencer:

Thinking a brief account of the trip of the Wheeling Knights Templar to the Triennial Convention, which was assembled at this place on the 1st inst., may be of some interest to your many readers, especially those of the fraternity, I have jotted down some notes by the way, and take the liberty of sending them to your paper for publication.

WHO WERE IN THE PARTY.

Our party, consisting of Grand Commander Odell S. Long, Sir Knights George, "Count" Schumacher, and Carothers of Wheeling Commandery No. 1, and Sir Knights Andrew J. Stone and E. W. S. Moore, of Crusade Commandery, U. D. of Fairmont, reached Pittsburgh on the 25th ult., where they joined the Pittsburgh delegation, and on the 27th ult. started for New Orleans. Taking dinner at Cumberland, we reached the "City of Magnificent Distances" about 10 o'clock P. M. There were joined by the New York, Boston and Pennsylvania delegations, making a train of eight Pullman cars, and were placed under the care of E. M. Jenkins, one of the noted firm of Cook, Son & Jenkins, professional tourists—and we may here remark, by way of parenthesis, that Mr. Jenkins took excellent care of us through the whole route, and we cordially recommend the firm to those getting up excursions. The spare no trouble to accommodate the travelers placing themselves under their charge.

THE JOURNEY FROM LYNCHBURG.

On Saturday, the 28th ult., we breakfasted at Lynchburg, Va., and arrived at Greensboro, N. C., about dusk. There we had to change cars, and during the interim had the good fortune to meet a very intelligent North Carolinian, whom we straightway interviewed. The result of our inquiries was about the same as we found along the whole route—"Hard times and poor prospects." He said the people had no energy to attempt anything. Their poll-tax was $1.25, and the State tax $1.25 on the poll, and $100 on the land. We got to Charlotte, N. C., about midnight, where we got supper. This was the only place of any importance, in size that we passed, after leaving Lynchburg, Va.

On Sunday, the 29th ult., we took breakfast at Central S. C., and about 10 o'clock crossed the Broad River, and went "marching through Georgia." At Lenoir, in Abbeville county, our train stopped to wait up, and the boys took advantage of the stop, to do the same thing.

MEETING WITH A GEORGIAN.

Whilst engaged in this pleasant occupation, a gaunt and genuine Georgian, with long, unkempt hair, and tattered clothing, approached our party, being in a feral mood, forthwith interviewed him, and elicited the following statements: He, the aforesaid Georgian, had a fine plantation, the finest land in Georgia, and would sell for $5 per acre. He would sell to a Northerner, provided he was not a Republican. No Republican could stay in that country, as none but Ku-Klux were allowed to live there, and if a radical purchased land, it was found out that he was of that persuasion, he "would have to get up and get it." Seeing what anxious eyes he cast upon the pint of aromatic fluid, distilled from the juice of the apple—denominated "apple brandy" in common parlance—in possession of one of our party, (Note.—Not one of the West Virginians, however,) he was asked if he "would not take a smile."

HE QUICKLY "SMILED,"

and then, with the chagrin of the party, put the bottle in his pocket, and started up the hill, bidding us "good-bye," and asking us to call on him, &c. Just at this time the train started, and the Georgian tantalized us (not us personally, of course) by running after the train, motioning as if he were going to throw us the bottle, and then stopping and taking another "smile." After keeping this up for a hundred yards or so, he finally threw us the bottle, which one of our party caught, at the risk of falling off the train. What risks some men will run in "political matters!" It may be noted here, as a singular fact, that not one of the party offered a Georgian a drink during the balance of the trip.

ARRIVAL AT ATLANTA.

About 4 o'clock P. M. we arrived at Atlanta, Ga., where we were met by some resident Sir Knights and entertained in a handsome manner. Atlanta is a place of considerable size and importance, and having an hour or two to spare, "Count" Schumacher, Long, Carothers, and myself, took a little jaunt through the place. The private residences of many of the citizens exhibited the presence of wealth, culture and refinement, and the business houses were very creditably indeed.

THROUGH ALABAMA.

On Monday, the 1st inst. we woke up at the little town of Greenville, Ala., and took breakfast at 11 o'clock A. M., at Hotel Ala. This is not a regular eating station, but as our train was some hours behind, Mr. Jenkins had telegraphed ahead, and the station house had been converted into a vast dining hall, where some three hundred hungry people were fed.

We passed Mobile and Montgomery; did not stop but a few moments at either place. The smallpox was raging very severely at Mobile, but was mostly confined to the colored population, numbers of whom were dying. We crossed the Alabama river about 2 o'clock P. M., and at 3 o'clock crossed Mobile Bay. About forty miles from New Orleans we crossed St. Louis Bay, which is about two miles wide.

RESUME OF THE JOURNEY.

Our route was from Pittsburgh via the Connellsville route to Washington, D. C.; then via the Washington City, Maryland & Great Western Railroad to Danville, Va.; then via the Piedmont Air Line Railway to Atlanta, Ga., touching at Greensboro and Charlotte, N. C., and Atlanta & West Point Railroad, and Western Railroad of Alabama to Montgomery, Ala.; then via the Mobile & Montgomery Railroad to Mobile, Ala., and then via the New Orleans, Mobile & Texas Railroad to New Orleans.

The scenery along the route was rather monotonous. Through Virginia, Mississippi, unutilized fields, and fine forests through North and South Carolina ditto; through Georgia and Alabama, ditto, with an occasional cotton field of small size, and through Louisiana, and part of Alabama, one continuous swamp, with our utter disgust, however, not one alligator showed his ugly head. Although we had our fire-arms all cocked, primed and ready for deadly work.

AS TO POPULATION.

The negroes largely predominate along the route. They seemed to be taking life easy. So they had food enough for today, they let to-morrow provide for itself. The whitest seem to be idle and lifeless, and to one accustomed to the

New Advertisements.

CENTRAL BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

OFFICE, 25 & 27 Fourteenth St.
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 9, 1874.

From New Orleans.

Letter from one of the delegates to the Great Masonic Triennial Convention—Experiences on Route—Meeting with a Gentleman and Genuine Georgian—Arrival in the Crescent City.

New Orleans, Dec. 5, 1874.

Editors of the Intelligencer:

Thinking a brief account of the trip of the Wheeling Knights Templar to the Triennial Convention, which was assembled at this place on the 1st inst., may be of some interest to your many readers, especially those of the fraternity, I have jotted down some notes by the way, and take the liberty of sending them to your paper for publication.

WHO WERE IN THE PARTY.

Our party, consisting of Grand Commander Odell S. Long, Sir Knights George, "Count" Schumacher, and Carothers of Wheeling Commandery No. 1, and Sir Knights Andrew J. Stone and E. W. S. Moore, of Crusade Commandery, U. D. of Fairmont, reached Pittsburgh on the 25th ult., where they joined the Pittsburgh delegation, and on the 27th ult. started for New Orleans. Taking dinner at Cumberland, we reached the "City of Magnificent Distances" about 10 o'clock P. M. There were joined by the New York, Boston and Pennsylvania delegations, making a train of eight Pullman cars, and were placed under the care of E. M. Jenkins, one of the noted firm of Cook, Son & Jenkins, professional tourists—and we may here remark, by way of parenthesis, that Mr. Jenkins took excellent care of us through the whole route, and we cordially recommend the firm to those getting up excursions. The spare no trouble to accommodate the travelers placing themselves under their charge.

THE JOURNEY FROM LYNCHBURG.

On Saturday, the 28th ult., we breakfasted at Lynchburg, Va., and arrived at Greensboro, N. C., about dusk. There we had to change cars, and during the interim had the good fortune to meet a very intelligent North Carolinian, whom we straightway interviewed. The result of our inquiries was about the same as we found along the whole route—"Hard times and poor prospects." He said the people had no energy to attempt anything. Their poll-tax was $1.25, and the State tax $1.25 on the poll, and $100 on the land. We got to Charlotte, N. C., about midnight, where we got supper. This was the only place of any importance, in size that we passed, after leaving Lynchburg, Va.

On Sunday, the 29th ult., we took breakfast at Central S. C., and about 10 o'clock crossed the Broad River, and went "marching through Georgia." At Lenoir, in Abbeville county, our train stopped to wait up, and the boys took advantage of the stop, to do the same thing.

MEETING WITH A GEORGIAN.

Whilst engaged in this pleasant occupation, a gaunt and genuine Georgian, with long, unkempt hair, and tattered clothing, approached our party, being in a feral mood, forthwith interviewed him, and elicited the following statements: He, the aforesaid Georgian, had a fine plantation, the finest land in Georgia, and would sell for $5 per acre. He would sell to a Northerner, provided he was not a Republican. No Republican could stay in that country, as none but Ku-Klux were allowed to live there, and if a radical purchased land, it was found out that he was of that persuasion, he "would have to get up and get it." Seeing what anxious eyes he cast upon the pint of aromatic fluid, distilled from the juice of the apple—denominated "apple brandy" in common parlance—in possession of one of our party, (Note.—Not one of the West Virginians, however,) he was asked if he "would not take a smile."

HE QUICKLY "SMILED,"

and then, with the chagrin of the party, put the bottle in his pocket, and started up the hill, bidding us "good-bye," and asking us to call on him, &c. Just at this time the train started, and the Georgian tantalized us (not us personally, of course) by running after the train, motioning as if he were going to throw us the bottle, and then stopping and taking another "smile." After keeping this up for a hundred yards or so, he finally threw us the bottle, which one of our party caught, at the risk of falling off the train. What risks some men will run in "political matters!" It may be noted here, as a singular fact, that not one of the party offered a Georgian a drink during the balance of the trip.

ARRIVAL AT ATLANTA.

About 4 o'clock P. M. we arrived at Atlanta, Ga., where we were met by some resident Sir Knights and entertained in a handsome manner. Atlanta is a place of considerable size and importance, and having an hour or two to spare, "Count" Schumacher, Long, Carothers, and myself, took a little jaunt through the place. The private residences of many of the citizens exhibited the presence of wealth, culture and refinement, and the business houses were very creditably indeed.

THROUGH ALABAMA.

On Monday, the 1st inst. we woke up at the little town of Greenville, Ala., and took breakfast at 11 o'clock A. M., at Hotel Ala. This is not a regular eating station, but as our train was some hours behind, Mr. Jenkins had telegraphed ahead, and the station house had been converted into a vast dining hall, where some three hundred hungry people were fed.

We passed Mobile and Montgomery; did not stop but a few moments at either place. The smallpox was raging very severely at Mobile, but was mostly confined to the colored population, numbers of whom were dying. We crossed the Alabama river about 2 o'clock P. M., and at 3 o'clock crossed Mobile Bay. About forty miles from New Orleans we crossed St. Louis Bay, which is about two miles wide.

RESUME OF THE JOURNEY.

Our route was from Pittsburgh via the Connellsville route to Washington, D. C.; then via the Washington City, Maryland & Great Western Railroad to Danville, Va.; then via the Piedmont Air Line Railway to Atlanta, Ga., touching at Greensboro and Charlotte, N. C., and Atlanta & West Point Railroad, and Western Railroad of Alabama to Montgomery, Ala.; then via the Mobile & Montgomery Railroad to Mobile, Ala., and then via the New Orleans, Mobile & Texas Railroad to New Orleans.

The scenery along the route was rather monotonous. Through Virginia, Mississippi, unutilized fields, and fine forests through North and South Carolina ditto; through Georgia and Alabama, ditto, with an occasional cotton field of small size, and through Louisiana, and part of Alabama, one continuous swamp, with our utter disgust, however, not one alligator showed his ugly head. Although we had our fire-arms all cocked, primed and ready for deadly work.

AS TO POPULATION.

The negroes largely predominate along the route. They seemed to be taking life easy. So they had food enough for today, they let to-morrow provide for itself. The whitest seem to be idle and lifeless, and to one accustomed to the

New Advertisements.

CENTRAL BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

OFFICE, 25 & 27 Fourteenth St.
WEDNESDAY, DEC. 9, 1874.

From New Orleans.

Letter from one of the delegates to the Great Masonic Triennial Convention—Experiences on Route—Meeting with a Gentleman and Genuine Georgian—Arrival in the Crescent City.

New Orleans, Dec. 5, 1874.

Editors of the Intelligencer:

Thinking a brief account of the trip of the Wheeling Knights Templar to the Triennial Convention, which was assembled at this place on the 1st inst., may be of some interest to your many readers, especially those of the fraternity, I have jotted down some notes by the way, and take the liberty of sending them to your paper for publication.

WHO WERE IN THE PARTY.

Our party, consisting of Grand Commander Odell S. Long, Sir Knights George, "Count" Schumacher, and Carothers of Wheeling Commandery No. 1, and Sir Knights Andrew J. Stone and E. W. S. Moore, of Crusade Commandery, U. D. of Fairmont, reached Pittsburgh on the 25th ult., where they joined the Pittsburgh delegation, and on the 27th ult. started for New Orleans. Taking dinner at Cumberland, we reached the "City of Magnificent Distances" about 10 o'clock P. M. There were joined by the New York, Boston and Pennsylvania delegations, making a train of eight Pullman cars, and were placed under the care of E. M. Jenkins, one of the noted firm of Cook, Son & Jenkins, professional tourists—and we may here remark, by way of parenthesis, that Mr. Jenkins took excellent care of us through the whole route, and we cordially recommend the firm to those getting up excursions. The spare no trouble to accommodate the travelers placing themselves under their charge.

THE JOURNEY FROM LYNCHBURG.

On Saturday, the 28th ult., we breakfasted at Lynchburg, Va., and arrived at Greensboro, N. C., about dusk. There we had to change cars, and during the interim had the good fortune to meet a very intelligent North Carolinian, whom we straightway interviewed. The result of our inquiries was about the same as we found along the whole route—"Hard times and poor prospects." He said the people had no energy to attempt anything. Their poll-tax was $1.25, and the State tax $1.25 on the poll, and $100 on the land. We got to Charlotte, N. C., about midnight, where we got supper. This was the only place of any importance, in size that we passed, after leaving Lynchburg, Va.

On Sunday, the 29th ult., we took breakfast at Central S. C., and about 10 o'clock crossed the Broad River, and went "marching through Georgia." At Lenoir, in Abbeville county, our train stopped to wait up, and the boys took advantage of the stop, to do the same thing.

MEETING WITH A GEORGIAN.

Whilst engaged in this pleasant occupation, a gaunt and genuine Georgian, with long, unkempt hair, and tattered clothing, approached our party, being in a feral mood, forthwith interviewed him, and elicited the following statements: He, the aforesaid Georgian, had a fine plantation, the finest land in Georgia, and would sell for $5 per acre. He would sell to a Northerner, provided he was not a Republican. No Republican could stay in that country, as none but Ku-Klux were allowed to live there, and if a radical purchased land, it was found out that he was of that persuasion, he "would have to get up and get it." Seeing what anxious eyes he cast upon the pint of aromatic fluid, distilled from the juice of the apple—denominated "apple brandy" in common parlance—in possession of one of our party, (Note.—Not one of the West Virginians, however,) he was asked if he "would not take a smile."

HE QUICKLY "SMILED,"

and then, with the chagrin of the party, put the bottle in his pocket, and started up the hill, bidding us "good-bye," and asking us to call on him, &c. Just at this time the train started, and the Georgian tantalized us (not us personally, of course) by running after the train, motioning as if he were going to throw us the bottle, and then stopping and taking another "smile." After keeping this up for a hundred yards or so, he finally threw us the bottle, which one of our party caught, at the risk of falling off the train. What risks some men will run in "political matters!" It may be noted here, as a singular fact, that not one of the party offered a Georgian a drink during the balance of the trip.

ARRIVAL AT ATLANTA.

About 4 o'clock P. M. we arrived at Atlanta, Ga., where we were met by some resident Sir Knights and entertained in a handsome manner. Atlanta is a place of considerable size and importance, and having an hour or two to spare, "Count" Schumacher, Long, Carothers, and myself, took a little jaunt through the place. The private residences of many of the citizens exhibited the presence of wealth, culture and refinement, and the business houses were very creditably indeed.

THROUGH ALABAMA.

On Monday, the 1st inst. we woke up at the little town of Greenville, Ala., and took breakfast at 11 o'clock A. M., at Hotel Ala. This is not a regular eating station, but as our train was some hours behind, Mr. Jenkins had telegraphed ahead, and the station house had been converted into a vast dining hall, where some three hundred hungry people were fed.

We passed Mobile and Montgomery; did not stop but a few moments at either place. The smallpox was raging very severely at Mobile, but was mostly confined to the colored population, numbers of whom were dying. We crossed the Alabama river about 2 o'clock P. M., and at 3 o'clock crossed Mobile Bay. About forty miles from New Orleans we crossed St. Louis Bay, which is about two miles wide.